Hepburn. She's a former hair and makeup artist now studying sociology and film, and she's calmly undaunted by the prospect of a new neighborhood. Richard is tall and willowy, soft-spoken and warm, with a kind of relaxed confidence.

The couple share a love of art, photography, 20th-century design and film, and their apartment pays homage to all of these influences. Against the white walls and warm parquet floors, the contemporary art, mid-century furnishings and organic shapes of a collection of vases stand out sharply. It's an edited still life chosen with a photographer's eye for unexpected still-life details. "I only buy something if I totally fall in love with it," says

After undergoing a renovation that involved taking out almost everything and starting again, the apartment, with its smooth expanse of parquetry flooring, is now a fine example of open-plan design, where living, kitchen and dining areas all connect to the balcony and outside view. Top right: long windows flood the main living space with light. Right, clockwise from top left: the bedroom is filled with soft tones of blue-grey, gold and ruby in shot-silk bedlinen; carefully selected pieces like this curvy glass vase help to soften some of the harder lines that feature throughout; Horizon's outdoor tennis court and swimming pool are rare luxuries in inner-city Darlinghurst.
